Strange Indian Custom.

These are busy days for Iron Tail, leader of the Indians with the 101 Ranch Real Wild West, which comes here on Tuesday, Sept. 15. The old Indian, be it known, is as famous among the redmen as Andrew Carnegie or President Wilson is among the people who now occupy the lands that once were the sole possessions of Iron Tail's forefathers.

To visit the redman's tepee, the "summer white house" of the chief of all the Sioux, so to speak, reveals to the visitor just how busy a real Indian can be. Secretaries? Bosh! No need for any kind of an amanuensis.

When Iron Tail has a proclamation to give to his people, or anything officially Indian that requires publication throughout his nation he merely shouts it out from in front of his tepee, the stolid followers grunting their approval or gutturally signifying that the word has been understood.

Then the unofficial secretaries get busy, the Carlisle graduates with the exhibition, and a letter to the Indian Agent conveys the news. This is spread abroad by the same system prevalent at the 101 Ranch Wild West. Iron Tail is sorely vexed at the new order, in vogue for a year past, that the various Indians under the chaparral of the Government be given a section and forced to live alone and till the land.

The old Sioux, whose profile appears on the new five cent piece, vigorously declares, through his interpreter, that Indians have always lived in villages, that they seek the companionship of each other, and that Secretary Lane, the new white chief of all the Indians, should take into consideration the plan that has been proposed to him to reassemble the various tribes into their old villages and allow them to live in that manner.

Iron Tail has dictated a long letter to Secretary Lane, and the 101 Ranch Indians have high hopes that it will bring some weight to bear upon the decision of the Secretary.

Joe Miller, the amusement director of the 101 Ranch, is intensely interested in the subject, for he tried hard to have the same idea worked on the Ponca Indian reservation, and was so successful that he has the title of "white chief of the Poncas" bestowed upon him by the redmen of Oklahoma. Iron Tail and Mr. Miller will be prominent in the parade on show day morning.

Banks, left Monday to attend the Teachers' Institute, of Ross county, held at Chillicothe, this week. The will of Susan A. Clouser was admitted to probate by Judge Worley Wednesday. Relatives of Miss Clouser, who received nothing under the will were represented by George L. Garrett, who put the witnesses to the will Herman Fairley and Charles D. McConnaughey through a searching cross examination. It will be remembered that Miss Clouser left the bulk of her property to Dr. V. B. McConnaughey, of this place.

Walter Head went to Chicago Tuesday for the purpose of trying out before the Redpath Lyceum bureau and has wired his father that he made good and signed up.
